In the trailer, the "Book of Shadows" was found by a half-naked woman with a twana symbol behind her back, at the woods of Black Hills, until she was attacked by an unknown man.[19] The title was seen as an attempt to capitalise on the Charmed series'

established market.[20] In the 2011 television series, The Secret Circle each family is shown to have their own "Book of Shadows", with each book containing unique spells. Gerald Gardner did not mention any such thing as a "Book of Shadows" in his fictitious 1949-novel about mediaeval witchcraft, High Magic's Aid. This article is about the traditional book of Wicca. She also helped to create a poem to include the Wiccan Rede within it.[10] Valiente also noticed that a chant in one ritual in the book was based upon the poem "A Tree Song" from Puck of Pook's Hill by Rudyard Kipling, which she had enjoyed as a child.[11] The chant in question stated that: Oh, do not tell the priest our plight, Or he would call it sin; But - we have been in the woods all night, A-conjuring summer in ! And we bring you news by word of mouth - Good news for cattle and corn - Now is the Sun come up from the South, With Oak, and Ash, and Thorn![12] (These eight lines are exactly the final stanza of "A Tree Song".) This version of the ritual, written by both Gardner and Valiente, but containing sections adopted from various sources, such as Aleister Crowley, Aradia, or the Gospel of the Witches, and even Rudyard Kipling, went on to become the traditional text for Gardnerian Wicca. In Eclectic Wicca In non-traditional or "eclectic" forms of Wiccan or Neo-pagan practice, the term Book of Shadows is more often used to describe a personal journal, rather than a traditional text. He claimed that it was a personal cookbook of spells that have worked for the owner; they could copy from his own book and add material as they saw fit. ^ "Charmed: The Complete First Season". Adding weight to the evidence indicating Gardner invented the Book was that other Neo-pagan witches of the time, such as Robert Cochrane, never made use of such a book.[7] Valiente's rewriting In 1953, Doreen Valiente joined Gardner's Bricket Wood coven, and soon rose to become its High Priestess. The Book of Shadows is also used by other Wicca in the 1970s onward, the idea of the Book of Shadows was then further propagated amongst solitary practitioners unconnected to earlier, initiatory traditions. The most famous Book of Shadows was created by the pioneering Wiccan Gerald Gardner sometime in the late 1940s or early 1950s, and which he utilised first in his Bricket Wood coven and then in other covens which he founded in following decades. He also stated that "well, if you think you can do any better, go ahead",[9] and Valiente thought that she could, later stating that: I accepted the challenge and set out to rewrite the Book of Shadows, cutting out the Crowleyanity as much as I could and trying to bring it back to what I felt was, if not so elaborate as Crowley's phraseology, at least our own and in our own words.[9] Valiente rewrote much of it, cutting out a lot of sections that originated with Aradia, or the Gospel of the Witches, which she felt was genuine witchcraft practice. The article in question was about an allegedly ancient Sanskrit divination manual which explained how to foretell things based upon the length of a person's shadow.[3] Valiente theorised that Gardner then adopted this term for his Witches' grimoire. In the 1970s, the then Alexandrians Janet Farrar and Stewart Farrar decided, with the consent of Doreen Valiente, that much of the Gardnerian book should be published in its true form. Felix's book was first thought to be his diary as he tried to hide its true existence from his friends, and Alice's book was thought to be her sister's. In 1949, he had renamed it to the Book of Shadows, and soon began to make use of it with his Bricket Wood Coven. ^ The Rebirth of Witchcraft, Doreen Valiente, page 54 ^ The Rebirth of Witchcraft, Doreen Valiente, page 55 ^ a b Lamond, Frederic (2004). Traditionally, "a Witch's book of shadows is destroyed upon death."[2] It can be an experimental practice, everyday ritual works, or a record of magic. Gardner claimed that these sections were genuinely historical in origin, and that witches had not been allowed to write anything down until recently, to avoid incrimination; when at last Books of Shadows were allowed, the rituals and spells had to be written in a jumbled manner to prevent any non-initiate from using them.[13] More recent scholars however have doubted their authenticity. Initially, when Wicca was still dominated by covens, "only one copy [of the Book] existed for an entire coven, kept by the high priests. In Seax-Wica, a tradition founded by Raymond Buckland, the Book of Shadows as simply "The Book". As the book is passed down from generation, each generation appears to write their own spells or notes, as indicated by Cassie's recognition of her mother's handwriting in her own family's "Book of Shadows". It seems likely that Gardner told his three subsequent initiatory lines that the book should be copied word for word, and Wiccans descended from Eleanor Bone, Patricia Crowther and Monique Wilson have widely believed that the book was of ancient provenance. [13] North American Gardnerians of the Long Island line allow covens to add rituals and teachings to the book, but nothing may be removed. [14] Contemporary usage There sometimes exists two Books of Shadows kept by more traditional Wiccans, one being a coven book of core rituals and practises which remains unchanged and from which new initiates copy, and the second, intended for personal use, which differs from witch to witch and contains magical material collected by the initiate, such as astrology, herbal lore, and information regarding divination.[15] Publication After Gardnerian Book of Shadows. 79-80. 2000. p. 63. In the 1996 film The Craft, which some critics saw as a major influence on the series Charmed, [17][18] the Book of Shadows was referred to as an object in which a witch keeps her "power thoughts". 35. Although his own book had been put together with the help of Doreen Valiente and included material from a variety of modern sources, (notably from Aradia, or the Gospel of the Witches and the writings of Aleister Crowley) it also included sections written in an antique (or mock-antique) style, including advice for witches brought to trial and tortured. She noticed how much of the material in his Book of Shadows was taken not from the works of the occultist Aleister Crowley, from Aradia, or the Gospel of the Witches, from the Key of Solomon and also from the rituals of Freemasonry. [8] She confronted Gardner with this, who admitted that the text he had received from the New Forest coven had been fragmentary and he had to fill much of it using various sources. That rule has proved unfeasible, and it is [now] commonplace for all Witches to have their own copies."[1] In the various traditions that make up British Traditional Wicca, copies of the original Book composed by Gerald Gardner with the aid of his High Priestess Doreen Valiente, along with alterations and additions that have been made since then, is followed by adherents. Valiente made the claim that Gardner found the term "Book of Shadows" from a 1949 edition (Volume I, Number 3) of a magazine known as The Occult Observer. According to tradition, Gardner claimed that the Book of Shadows was burned after a person died, so that it would not be discovered that they had been a witch. The Guardian.
